REAL ESTATE AND DEVELOPMENT INDUSTRIES BUILDING BLOCKS OF BC ECONOMY

VANCOUVER, BC — The construction of residential homes of all kinds, shopping malls and office towers across the province is a foundation of BC’s economy. A new Economic Impact of the Development Industry Report says the development industry in 2016 contributed $22.9 billion towards the provincial GDP, almost twice that reported for the forest industry.

This is up from $17B in 2012, a 34.6 per cent increase, according to the new, independent study by accounting, tax and business group MNP. Released in March 2018, the study was commissioned by the Urban Development Institute, the British Columbia Real Estate Association (BCREA), and the Greater Vancouver Home Builders’ Association (GVHBA).

The development industry is part of the larger BC real estate and construction sector, which includes real estate agents, brokers, lessors and businesses involved with residential and non-residential building construction. Together, the real estate and construction sectors directly account for about 15 per cent of the BC provincial GDP, the report says.

Hundreds of thousands of employees—about 233,600 full-time equivalent positions, many of them highly-paid unionized trades—depend on the industry for their livelihoods.

Governments at all three levels rely on the taxation revenues, about $6.6 billion annually, to pay for health, education, social services and affordable housing. These taxation revenues to governments include all the taxes and fees paid by the development industry to the federal, provincial and municipal governments, but not the additional GST, Property Transfer Tax or annual property taxes paid by the home buyer.

“With employment numbers that high, everybody knows somebody who works in this broad sector, whether it’s skilled trades, engineering, accounting, finance, law, real estate or sales. Twenty-five years ago, our economy was heavily reliant on forestry and natural resources. While our resource industry will always be integral to our economy, everyone needs a home to live. That includes 30,000 new lower mainland residents who come here each year, plus about 100,000 international students who study here annually.”
